Ice Cube talks BIG3, LeBron vs. Kyrie and why he loves Boston

The rapper and actor opens up about his 3-on-3 basketball league, the Lakers-Celtics rivalry and more. MATT JUUL

Professional 3-on-3 basketball makes its debut in Boston this weekend when BIG3 takes over the TD Garden. The league, founded by the legendary Ice Cube, features a number of former NBA stars, including several ex-Celtics like Nate Robinson, Glen Davis and the "White Mamba," Brian Scalabrine.

Following a successful inaugural season in 2017, BIG3 has expanded its reach this year, bringing the action to more arenas around the country and to viewers across the globe thanks to live-streaming and broadcast deals with Fox Sports and Facebook. The future is pretty bright for BIG3, too, with interest growing for video game projects, as well as possible international leagues, which would take advantage of the growing hype around 3-on-3 basketball ahead its debut at the 2020 Summer Olympics in Tokyo. All of this is music to Ice Cube's ears. The rapper, actor and lifelong Lakers fan has always had a special place in his heart for the sport and is excited to see his league grow.

Ahead of Friday's games in Boston, we caught up with Ice Cube to chat about BIG3's future, his thoughts on the Lakers-Celtics rivalry now that LeBron James is with Los Angeles and more.

As BIG3 gets ready to take over the Garden, what are your thoughts on Boston? Has the city been good to you over the years?

I love Boston because it's a city that loves its own identity and is proud of its traditions. I respect that a lot. I always know that when you hear Boston, it reminds me of a city that you know you're going to get a blue collar effort. Being from L.A., a lot of people think that all we like is sunshine, finesse, pretty stuff—but it's not true. It's a lot of grit in Los Angeles, it's just that side of the city is never publicized. It's always the beach and the glamour. There's always been a ton of respect, even more than like New York. In New York, there seems like there's a rivalry there for no reason. But with Boston, it just seems like there's no rivalry between the cities besides the sports. New York is always giving us static. I'm pretty sure Boston gives us our share, but only because of the sports.

As a Lakers fan, you must be pumped about the LeBron news. Do you see a renewed L.A.-Boston rivalry, considering LeBron's rocky relationship with Kyrie Irving?

A little bit, yeah. I think the Lakers have a lot of work to do to get to where the Celtics seem like they're already at. I think it's going to be cool just because Kyrie vs. LeBron is always going to bring some attention nowadays. It's great because both of those great players are on storied franchises, so that's going to be good. But until the Lakers get into playoff contention, contending for a title like the Celtics are, then it's going to be like "Come on, hurry up to the party." The Lakers have some work to do.

The Lakers are in a tough division out west too. That's how you want it. If you want to be the best, you have to beat the best. As BIG3's sophomore sea- son comes to a close this summer, what's been the biggest improvements over last year? How do you plan to take things to another level going forward?

The basketball is better, which to me, is where it all starts. Everything else doesn't work if the basketball is trash. The basketball has to be great, the integrity for the game has to be extremely high and I think we're meeting those criteria. Adding another official, we're not missing obvious calls, which is good. Being live is great. I think that's extremely important to sports. If you're not live, you're not really in the game, to be honest. You're more of a program, not in the mix. Being live is a step in the right direction.

When you're live on TV and you're live at the arena, people don't necessarily have to come. But you might get a building that's not 18,000 people. It might be 10,000. In the future going ahead, we have to learn how to get 18,000 people in that building and show it on TV in the same city, so the excitement for the sport has to go up. These are the things we're ready to do and implement. This is just part of us learning, growing pains of the league.

From the style of play to having an MC in the arena, BIG3 has a lot of fun aspects to it that traditional sports leagues lack. Is that the mission with BIG3, to make basketball fun again?

Our motto is "We're changing the game." That's what we want to do for the better, not just to do it, but for the better, actually. We're not like, "Let's come in here, muck it up, do something different just because." Everything we do we feel is to make the game more entertaining, more accessible and just what people want to see, true passion, true emotions. We don't want to police our players to the point where they feel like robots out there. Just being able to trash talk, express yourself. Of course, we don't want a whole lot of profanity, that's what we come down on is the language. But just the fact that you can express yourself makes the game more entertaining.

Like soccer or mixed martial arts, basketball has a large global audience since anyone can play without needing a ton of equipment. Do you feel BIG3 has the potential to expand internationally?

Without a doubt. We've already been talking to Leandro Barbosa about BIG3 Brazil or BIG3 South America, and we've been talking to people in China about BIG3 China. We feel like if we can get a few territories around the world, Australia, maybe Europe, the champions of those leagues can play in the summer against the best in the world. We feel like, by 3-on-3 being an Olympic sport, every country that plays basketball, if they weren't interested in 3-on-3, got to get interested. This is a cool way to promote the sport, get players to play in a league where, when they go to the Olympics, they're ready. It seems like this is what's coming together, slowly but surely.

If you go:

Aug. 3, 7 p.m., TD Garden, 100 Legends Way, $27+, tdgarden.com

If you had to sign one hip-hop star with skills on the courts to BIG3, who would it be?

Probably The Game. I think he's big enough and strong enough to play in the BIG3. You've got to have your big boy pants on to play this because the guys, their basketball IQ is through the roof.

From basketball and business to hip-hop and Hollywood, you've left your mark in a lot of places. When you look back at your legacy, years from now, how do you hope to be remembered? Fearless.

Things you can't miss at Boston GreenFest 2018

Films, forums, food and more.
ELIE LEVINE

Doing your part to help the environment has never been more fun. Come celebrate our planet with a series of cultural events and forums and an array of local foods at Boston GreenFest 2018, New England's largest environmental festival. Test-drive the electric Nissan Leaf, shop eco-friendly products at an EcoBazaar, and don't forget to check out a cool kinetic sculpture called the Lobster Roll.

"Boston GreenFest spans age, culture and industry with the goal of creating solutions to environmental issues at hand, through the arts and innovation," Gov. Charlie Baker said in a statement on the GreenFest website. "The combined efforts of the Commonwealth and New England region will help to transform our region into a healthier community."

Live entertainment

Dozens of live performances will enhance your Boston GreenFest 2018 experience. Take in Haitian and Dominican rhythms, Latin pop, reggae and even watch a dance performance from Boston Community Dance Project.

Local food trucks and artisanal drinks

A new feature for Boston GreenFest 2018 is the local food-truck emporium with plenty of local food vendors Oath Pizza, Bartleby's Seitan Stand, Eloti Boston, Yommi Healthy Frozen Treats and Jamaica Mi Hungry. Taste-test sustainable beer and wine at the wine and beer garden.

Youth programs
Boston GreenFest's

EcoYouth Leadership Congress will provide high school and college students (ages 15-25) with a crash course in the world of sustainability. Youngsters can hear from inspiring speakers with real-world conservation experience.

A green film fest

Documentaries are a great way to understand what's happening to our world. Jose Huaman Turpo, a Peruvian activist who has been capturing his indigenous people on camera for several years, will present his film "Voces Que Sanan" (Voices That Heal).

Another can't-miss film at Boston GreenFest 2018 is "Young Voices for the Planet," a film produced by a group of young activists from Lexington, Massachusetts. Calling themselves "Save Tomorrow," they've led an effort to support the use of solar power in their hometown, and their film won the Peggy Charren Award for Excellence at the Boston International

The fest takes over City Hall Plaza all weekend long.

Kids Film Festival last fall. "Sonic Sea" is a film about the effects of noise pollution on marine life.

An Earth-friendly fashion show

Boston GreenFest 2018's cultural events go beyond just cinema. The "Eco Fashion Show" in partnership with Lasell College showcases Boston-based designers like Nathalia JMag, a recent finalist on Project Runway, and Mela of Mela Amorosa Fashions. See models rock the runway with sustainable fashions on Saturday, Aug. 4, at 4:30 p.m. on the main stage. Purchase your own sustainable goods at an EcoBazaar.

'Christopher Robin' brings the Winnie the Pooh story to a new generation

Writer Alex Ross Perry opens up about his approach to these classic characters. GREGORY WAKEMAN

"Christopher Robin" is Disney's attempt to bring the beloved characters and stories of A.A. Milne and illustrations of E.H. Shepard to a new audience. To accomplish that, the studio recruited the vocal talents of Jim Cummings to once again voice Winnie the Pooh and Tigger, roles he's been performing over the last 30 years.

But there was plenty of new blood brought in to oversee this brand new story of Pooh and an elderly Christopher Robin, played by Ewan McGregor, who has become subdued and disgruntled with adult life. The most surprising addition to "Christopher Robin" came in the shape of screenwriter Alex Ross Perry, who before writing the Disney film had primarily worked his movie magic as the writer and director of small indie films "The Color Wheel," "Listen Up Philip" and "Queen of Earth." We caught up with Perry to chat about the film.

What was the biggest adjustment you had to make writing the film? There's two sides to that. One is that the process of doing this was so rewardingly educational, simply because the beats you are hitting are pre-ordained. You are using a template of successfully streamlined studio family entertainment. So the beats are, you have a little prologue. You introduce things. By page 10, you have introduced this. By page 20 Christopher and Pooh have met. By page 40 they are off on their journey. The structure of all Disney movies, from "Snow White" onward, there's not a huge amount of variation on ones that are made at that level. The biggest adjustment was basically me learning a second language. I knew how to write, and had written my own movies, but I hadn't learned how to write in that language.

Disney hopes to recapture the magic of Winnie the Pooh with this live-action adaptation. DISNEY

It sounds like it was a rewarding experience. It was very satisfying after a couple of months of getting to the point where I was very fluent in Pooh, because the first approach in those first couple of frightening weeks was, you know, this is a movie with nine characters that I didn't create. One of which I did create, adult Christopher. But I did not create the idea of "Christopher Robin." I just had to get to a point after a couple of weeks where I had to feel like I had created them. Otherwise I couldn't take ownership of them. I couldn't feel like I was borrowing them and I had to return them in the same condition I found them. I had to get to a point where I believed Pooh and Piglet and Tigger and Eeyore, that I wasn't just writing fan-fiction, but I was writing something that was organic and innate for myself.

"Christopher Robin" opens August 3.

the GRUMBLE

Pat King
Grumble Editor

The time has come to announce our Grumble of the week winner! We had received a lot of responses to a Grumble about solving "social media fatigue," and this one was one of my favorites. I had used it for a larger story that we had published online about the subject, but here is the whole thing in print for the very first time:

READER WRITE-INS:

It sounds like you have a dilemma on your hands. If you're in a relationship, that might make the dilemma easier to deal with. I am not in a relationship but wish that I was. That's one of my dilemmas. I'm retired. Retirement: That's something I like, something I value. I started accessing the internet in September, 2005, while working as a messenger. I've learned the hard way to spend as little time as possible at social-media sites. And I access the internet for only an hour a day — with rare exceptions. I will look at people's blogs at Tumblr and, sometimes, leave a comment. Same with YouTube. I have my own blog at Tumblr. I rarely will leave a comment at Pinterest. The usual communication at all of these sites reminds me of high school — and I wasn't really a big fan of high school. Maybe somebody will share some revelation with you.

MBTA offering special train to Gillette Stadium for Beyoncé and Jay Z concert

Are you going to the Beyoncé and Jay Z concert this Sunday? The MBTA wants to help you get there.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Are you heading to the Beyoncé and Jay Z concert this weekend at Gillette Stadium? Before you can go apes-t in the audience, you have to get there, and the MBTA is here to help.

If you don't want to deal with the crowds getting into or out of the Gillette Stadium parking lot — or the $40 price tag to park — the MBTA is offering special train tickets just so you can see Bey and her bae.

The MBTA and the agency's commuter rail operating manager, Keolis, announced a special train service that will bring you to Gillette Stadium and back for the Beyoncé and Jay Z concert Sunday, Aug. 5 as part of the on the Run II tour.

These $20 round-trip

tickets are available on the mTicket app or for purchase at ticket offices in Boston's North, South and Back Bay Stations.

Officials are encouraging concert-goers who want to avoid driving to Gillette Stadium to buy their train tickets early through the app, but tickets may also be purchased onboard at Ruggles, Forest Hills and Dedham Corp. stations.

"We are pleased to offer this special train service to Gillette," said David Scorey, Keolis CEO and general manager, in a statement. "Passengers can avoid the costs associated with driving, parking and traffic to spend more time enjoying the journey with their fellow concert-goers."

The returning train to Boston will leave Gillette Stadium 30 minutes after the concert ends. Officials are reminding riders that alcohol is prohibited on all trains and the Gillette Stadium policy on personal items — available at gillettestadium.com/bagpolicy — will also apply to train passengers.

So, while you can't be drunk in love on the train, at least you can be crazy in love with Beyoncé and Jay Z and the chance to not pay for parking at Gillette.

Beyoncé and Jay Z Concert train schedule

The special Beyoncé and Jay Z concert train will leave South Station at 5:35 p.m. on Sunday.

The schedule will then be:

Back Bay: 5:40 p.m.

Ruggles: 5:43 p.m.

Forest Hills: 5:49 p.m.

Dedham Corporate: 6:02 p.m.

Foxboro: 6:45 p.m.

Boeing to lease space in new MIT Kendall Square building

Aerospace company Boeing will be the first major tenant in the MIT Kendall Square Initiative.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Aerospace company Boeing will soon have a new home in Cambridge Kendall Square.

Boeing, the largest aerospace company in the world, has agreed to lease about 100,000 square feet of a Massachusetts Institute of Technology building to be developed at 314 Main St. in Kendall Square, according to MIT.

This makes Boeing the first major tenant to commit to MIT's Kendall Square Initiative, a revitalization effort that includes plans for six new buildings bringing housing, retail, research and development, academic and open spaces to the Cambridge area.

By joining this area, Boeing and MIT can more easily collaborate on innovations and research, officials said.

"It's fitting that Boeing will join the Kendall/MIT innovation family. Our research interests have been intertwined for over 100 years, and we've worked together to advance world-changing aerospace technologies and systems," said MIT

Boeing will occupy about 100,000 square feet in a new MIT Kendall Square building at 314 Main St. GETTY IMAGES

Provost Martin Schmidt in a statement. Schmidt pointed to MIT's Department of Aeronautics and Astronautics as the oldest program of its kind in the United States, saying that "Boeing's presence will create an unprecedented opportunity for new synergies in this industry."

The two institutions are already working together. Earlier this year, Boeing announced it will be the lead donor for an $18 million MIT project to replace the school's 80-year-old Wright Brothers Wind Tunnel.

A Changing Kendall Square

Boeing is expected to occupy its new home within the 314 Main St. building — located between the MBTA Red Line station and the Kendall Hotel — by the end of 2020.

Also with in that 250-foot-tall, 17-floor building will be the MIT Museum, which will take up more than 57,000 square feet on the ground, second and third floors; retail and restaurant tenants and the new home of the MIT Press Bookstore.

The basement will house storage and mechanical space and bicycle parking and is currently in construction. The vertical construction is expected to begin in September.

On the opposite side of the T station will be MIT's new graduate residence hall.

Along with 450 units for graduate housing, that building will house MIT's Admissions Office, an innovation and entrepreneurship hub, a child-care center, retail and the MIT Forum, a community programming space.

Between these two buildings will be more than two acres of outdoor space.

It'll be supercheap to fly to these cities this month

Looking for a low-cost getaway? Nab deals to these spot when airfares plunge in August.

Fodor's Travel

Looking to beat the heat or take one last trip before you head back to school? Travel app Hopper predicts that these 20 destinations will see the steepest fare drops for August flights, just in time for your next vacation. Let's take a look at the ticket-price drops in U.S. cities first.

See Los Angeles by Way of Long Beach
Long Beach, California, tops the domestic list at a super-wallet-friendly average flight price of $185 (a 49% decrease from the usual). Torn between lounging on sunny beaches, visiting the Queen Mary or renting a car to explore the Pacific Coast? When flights are nearly half off, you can do all three and visit Los Angeles too!
The Hollywood

Walk of Fame, the second-best drink Fodor's Digital Editorial Director Jeremy Tarr has ever had, and a ton of great experiences are all within an hour's drive away.

Just to double-check the numbers, we went to Google Flights to look up a couple of destinations. In July, flights from New York City and Chicago start at around $300. Flights between Miami and Long Beach are closer to $400. Do a quick Google search of your own city and take off the predicted discount to get a good idea of what flight prices in your area might be.

Eat your heart out in Houston
Houston comes in second $231 (a 38% decrease). Texas heat in August might not be your idea of fun, but if you like food, Houston's restaurant scene has been named a can't-miss by the likes of David Chang and the late Anthony Bourdain.

With first-generation immigrant chefs bringing cuisine from all over the world, Houston offers you a global culinary experience without ever having to take out your passport and there's sure to be plenty of A/C.

Other U.S. cities with cheap flights in August include:

Washington, $199 (27%)
New Orleans, $224 (27%)
Albuquerque, $215 (24%)
Denver, $175 (23%)
Portland, $208 (21%)
New York, $254 (21%)
Philadelphia, $206 (21%)
Tampa, $199 (20%)

Discounts for international travel are equally exciting. While these fare drops are often caused by locals emptying out of hot cities for coastal vacations, there's no reason you can't take advantage of a low-cost flight to do the same. Instead of jostling with other tourists at well-known landmarks, you can use destination cities as a home base for more extensive travel once you're in the region.

If you've wanted to explore Spain, flights to Madrid and Barcelona are both predicted to drop $580 (31%) and $566 (27%), respectively, in August. SHARON HSU

Huge four-game series this weekend between the rivals.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

Victory has been a near lock for the Red Sox over the past few weeks but despite their torrid pace, the Yankees remain in striking distance for the division crown. New York is 5.5 games behind the Sox for first place and a good showing over this four game series at Fenway this weekend could get them even closer.

The Yankees have won three of their last four games heading into the series while the Red Sox had a relatively poor showing against the Phils this week. In the two games against Philly, the Sox scored a grand total of three runs.

This should not be a cause for concern, however, as Alex Cora rested Mookie Betts in the second game against the Phils and the Red Sox have routinely bounced back offensively after poor showings at the plate this season. To open the second half of the season the Sox scored one run on a Friday night against Detroit, were shut out the next day, but responded with nine runs in the series finale. They also had a 10 run outing last Saturday against Minnesota so saying they're slumping at the plate is a bit much.

The Sox still lead the entire Majors in runs scored this season with 572. The Indians are a distant second with 547 scored and the Yankees are third with 546.

One thing the Yanks absolutely do better than

Mookie Betts and the Red Sox look to remain hot this weekend against the rival Yankees. GETTY IMAGES the Sox is bash home runs as they have a whopping 168 as a team this season. The Red Sox, who are fifth in MLB in dingers, check in with "just" 144.

The Yankees have seven players on their roster that have 10 home runs or more on the season – and two that already have 20-plus in Aaron Judge (26 homers) and Giancarlo Stanton (24).

Fresh faces

The Sox and Yankees got high grades coming out of the MLB trade deadline, but there is a genuine feeling that New York boss Brian Cashman hit it out of the park. The Yanks shored up their rotation with J.A. Happ and Lance Lynn and got outstanding lefty reliever Zach Britton from the Orioles. The Sox did pry Ian Kinsler from the Angels for an upgrade at second base, but it was clear that the team's biggest need was bullpen help.

The series this weekend will be littered with fresh faces, particularly on Saturday when Happ squares off against the Red Sox' Nathan Eovaldi. Eovaldi, who ultimately could wind up in the Sox bullpen this postseason, was tremendous in his first appearance as a member of the Sox. Last Sunday against Minnesota, Eovaldi worked seven innings while giving up just four hits and zero runs.

In last week's column we scanned the NFL divisional futures and regular season win total markets and gave out a Super Bowl prediction. This week we'll try to clarify the playoff picture by selecting three teams to either make or miss the postseason.

49ERS TO MAKE PLAYOFFS (+145)

Jimmy Garoppolo was a revelation for the 49ers once he was named the starting quarterback last year. He was a perfect 5-0 after inheriting a 1-10 mess, and his offense averaged 28.8 PPG. 2018 marks the first year of a massive 5-year, $137.5 million contract ($74 million guaranteed) that Garoppolo signed in the offseason.

Jerrick McKinnon was brought in from Minnesota to replace

Carlos Hyde at running back. McKinnon seems to better compliment Kyle Shanahan's offense as a potent receiver out of the backfield, and according to Pro Football Focus, he's the eighth-best running back in the NFL at pass protecting. San Francisco also upgraded to Weston Richburg at center, who's allowed only two sacks since the 2015 season (albeit he missed half of 2017 with a concussion), and drafted offensive lineman Mike McGlinchey ninth overall.

The Niners shored up their defense late in the draft and added veteran Richard Sherman at cornerback. Their unit may pale in comparison to the daunting but volatile Rams squad, but they should do enough to prevent games from getting away on Garoppolo. Expect San Francisco to keep up in if not win the NFC West race; if the Rams play to their talent level and win the division crown, then the Niners should find themselves as a wild card team.

TEXANS TO MISS PLAYOFFS (-115)

The Texans will try to bounce back from a dismal 4-12 season that saw them lose J.J. Watt and Deshaun Watson far too early in the campaign. Watt is a stud and Watson was brilliant in his seven games as a starter, but both have a long history of injuries that make them tough to rely on.

Houston's draft was well-reviewed but was graded on a curve as they had no selections until the third round. Tyrann Mathieu signed as a free agent to bolster the secondary, but the Texans didn't add enough difference-makers to keep up with the Titans and Jaguars in 2018.

SAINTS TO MAKE PLAYOFFS (-150)

This play serves as a saver for last week's prediction of a Saints Super Bowl victory. New Orleans strengthened their defense with veterans

The Saints were just one play away from advancing to the NFC title game in 2017. The additions they made should get them closer to their second Super Bowl win in franchise history, but there plenty of things that could go wrong along the way. Having an insurance policy on New Orleans in case they lose in the postseason is wise.
